"Some 290 of our nearly 390 national park sites have similar programs, programs that attract children to the National Parks with their families," He continued by saying that the Junior Ranger program "is a great way for kids of all ages as well as adults of all ages to learn, to explore, and to have fun along the Missouri National Recreational River corridor."

Berndt said that the activity booklets are now available at the Lewis and Clark Visitor Center by Gavins Point Dam. There is one booklet for the 39-mile reach from Fort Randall Dam to Running Water, South Dakota, and another booklet for the 59-mile reach from Gavins Point Dam at Nebraska's Ponca State Park. Participants in the program can take either one or both. Upon completion the participant will receive a Junior Ranger certificate and be sworn in as a Junior Park Ranger. The program is open-ended, there is no time limit for completing the program. There is no charge for the activity booklets.

For further information please call George Berndt at 402/667-2550. The Missouri National Recreational River is made up of two free-flowing segments of the Missouri River totaling 98 miles that still exhibit some of the river conditions and adjacent natural landscapes encountered by the Lewis and Clark Expedition.
